Police Guard of Machado Family Is Strengthened

PHILADELPHIA, Aug. 19.—(INS)—Police today refused to consider lightly the assertion of a hotel manager that a threat to bomb the hostelry unless the exiled Machado family departed was the work of a jesting friend and strengthened the police guard given the refugees.

Daniel C. Crawford, Jr., manager of the hotel, declared the telephoned threat was made by a friend who later called again and explained it was a joke. Police decided, however, to brook no chances.

Meanwhile, Senora Machado, her three daughters and sons-in-law and five grandchildren seemed resigned to a long wait here unless the deposed president of Cuba, Gerardo Machado, completes his plans to rejoin them possibly here or in Canada.

LANGHORNE, Aug. 19.—Under arrest today on a technical charge of causing his father's death in an automobile accident, a youth is being held here.

Albert Knab, Sr., 50, Langhorne, received injuries last night which caused his death a few minutes later in Frankford Hospital. Alben, Jr., 23, told police Knab was hurled from his car, which then turned over and rolled upon him on Roosevelt Boulevard.

The son said the car overturned as he tried to avoid a collision with a car approaching from the opposite direction. The father suffered a fractured skull.

An unidentified man about 60 years old was seriously injured last night when struck by a hit-and-run driver on the Lincoln Highway near the Langhorne Speedway. The victim is in Mercer Hospital suffering from a possible fracture of the skull.

Highway Patrolman Edward McLister found the man unconscious along the road at about 10:30 o'clock, and took him to the office of a physician at Langhorne, who advised immediate removal to a hospital.

Nothing was found in the man's clothing to aid in his identification. He was about 5 feet, 9 inches, in height, and wore a blue suit and no hat.

The first stop was made at the farm of Stanley Mason and John Kriner, Jr., near Coopersburg. This duo of poultry fanciers displayed more than 127 varieties of chickens, bantams, ducks, geese and guineas.

The second stop was made at the farm of George Hausmanns, Coopersburg, R. D., where the party were served pretzels and lemonade. Mr. Hausmanns has about 5500 laying birds, all of which are white Leghorns. These birds are housed in a three-story barn. He also maintains a Shendooah breeder which he uses to raise his young chickens. After the stock is started in the brooder, he explained, the brooder house is moved out to a range provided with shelters. He hatches about 75,000 chicks a year. Checking up on production value, he keeps a record of egg production by having arrangements for trap nests for about 200 birds.

WELL-DESERVED PRAISE

Philadelphia, Pa.,
August 16, 1933.

Editor, The Courier,
Bristol, Pa.

Dear Sir:

Had the good fortune recently to pick up a copy of your paper on a train en route to New York and I read it thoroughly. In it I noted that the Legion Cadets were endeavoring to raise funds to buy uniforms. I have seen these boys numerous times and they are a real credit to Bristol. I sincerely hope the citizens of your city will realize the worth of any organization of this kind to the community and dig down enough to purchase the equipment necessary. These boys are the future men of America and Bristol will be failing in its obligations if it permits them to fail in this effort.

Enclosed find one dollar as my contribution to this good cause which I would appreciate your delivering to the proper party.

Here's hoping Bristol comes through.

Yours truly,
B. L. RAPPAPORT,

If you're wise—you'll advertise.

WAIT A WHILE

Now comes a plea that the Federal Government, as part of its recovery program, extend a helping hand to education.

It is made by Dean William F. Russell of Teachers' College, Columbia university.

Dean Russell, speaking before the Institute on the Administration of Public Education, advocated that part of the $3,000,000,000 in the public works fund be allotted to public schools, state universities and other phases of the program of general education. He urged that the government "make grants for this purpose at once in almost any form."

He held public education to be "of first rank and of first importance" among the public works on the program of direct Federal subsidy.

Few will disagree with the dean on the importance of public education. There are other considerations, however, to be taken into account in connection with his proposal of direct Federal aid to schools. Subsidization of education by the Federal Government would invite dangers that might prove more disastrous than the conditions it ought to cure. The states have surrendered many of their original functions to the Federal government but public education is one to which they have wisely clung.

There is no question but that educational costs generally were far too high before the depression's pinch was begun to be felt. Like most institutions supported by public funds, the schools had been inviolated by extravagance. Elimination of some of the unessentials, cutting of salaries and consolidations offered a way out. Readjustments along these lines are being made. If wisely done, they promise to benefit rather than to damage public education.

There, of course, is the possibility that there might develop an emergency of such force as to make necessary the extending of Federal assistance. This point, however, has not been reached nor is it observable on the horizon.

Unless and until such a crisis be reached, the matter should be left to the states to handle in their own way. The Federal Government has enough on its hands already to keep itself busy for quite a while at an eventual cost to the public which none now can estimate.

About the only thing the human race hasn't improved upon is people.

The self-made man often is a product for which nobody else wants the credit.

There is another job the government might tackle—certainly of the bathing beauty crop.

What we want to know is, if mosquitoes have such a wonderful homing instinct, why don't they go there?

After reading about the New York century plant which didn't bloom on time we deduced the origin of the expression, "bloomin' late."

In Portugal, we are told, children are fined instead of being whipped when they misbehave in school. What happens to them when they get home and the parents have to dig up an amount ranging from one cent to $12 we are not informed.

Cuba's New President Patriot, Diplomat

New Cuban President Soldier-Statesman

Dr. Carlos Manuel De Cespedes, new Provisional President of Cuba, has a brilliant diplomatic career behind him. Born in 1871, when Cuba was still a Spanish possession, he fought in the insurrection of 1898. His father was President of Cuba's first revolutionary government. The new President has served Cuba both as a member of the lower house and in ministerial offices in many countries. He was Cuba's Ambassador to Washington from 1914 to 1922. During that time he became acquainted with the two men who wield a large influence in his country today—President Roosevelt and Ambassador Sumner Welles. During that time, also, De Cespedes married Signorita Laura Bertini Alessandrini in New York City, the ceremony being performed by Mayor John Purroy Mitchell.

HAVANA, CUBA,
(I. I. N.Y.)—With Dr. Carlos Manuel De Cespedes at the wheel of Cuba's ship of State as Provisional President, history once more has proved its uncanny faculty of repeating itself.

Back in 1868, under conditions not dissimilar to those that prevailed in the closing stages of the Machado regime, Dr. Carlos Miguel De Cespedes, father of the new President, touched off the first revolution against the rule of Spain and became president of Cuba's first revolutionary government. His memory is revered throughout Cuba today as the father of his country.

The new President took the reins of government on his sixty-second birthday, the crowning achievement of a life spent in the service of his country. Devotion to Cuba has been his outstanding trait all through life.

SOLDIER AND DIPLOMAT

The man who has taken on the job of steering Cuba through the turbulent seas in which she was left by the fleeing Machado fought the Spaniards in the insurrection of 1898, when the United States once and for all tore the strangling hands of Spain from her throat. After independence was won, he was chief of the general staff of Cuba's young army for several years, after which he went into the diplomatic field.

For this office De Cespedes was well equipped. He received his early education at Charter's Institute in New York City, and afterwards studied in Europe, where he served as correspondent for an American news gathering service during his studies. He was graduated from the University of Havana as a Doctor of Civil and International Law, returning to the homeland to take these degrees after his foreign education had been completed.

INTO PUBLIC LIFE

The new President of Cuba made his bow in politics as Deputy in the lower house in Havana, where he served six years, during which time he also was revolutionary governor of the Province of Santiago.

De Cespedes has had a varied and distinguished career in diplomacy. While in Rome he was the Cuban delegate to the permanent Commission of International Investigation on Agriculture, in which he also represented the Republic of Salvador. He also served his country on a special mission to Greece. In 1913, De Cespedes served on an important commission in the Cuban State Department, part of the work including the reforming of the diplomatic ceremonies of the republic.

FAVORITE IN WASHINGTON

In 1914, Carlos De Cespedes was sent to Washington as Cuban Minister to the United States. He served in that post until 1922 and it was during his tenure of office there that he became acquainted with the two men who today wield so much influence in his own country—President Roosevelt and Ambassador Sumner Welles. To the latter is given the credit for arranging the change of government in Cuba without recourse to open warfare and much bloodshed.

It was also during his term in Washington (in 1915) that De Cespedes married Mme. Laura Bertini Alessandrini in New York City. The ceremony was performed by the then Mayor John Purroy Mitchell, who was requested to do so by the late William Jennings Bryan, then Secretary of State.

In 1931, De Cespedes was appointed Cuban Ambassador to Mexico on an important mission designed by President Machado as part of his foreign policy. During the trying period in Cuba for the last four or five years, he had been active in seeking a peaceful solution of the difficulties that confronted his country. His ascension to the highest office in Cuba is hailed by all parties as the beginning of a New Deal—a new era of peace and prosperity for the island republic.

CHAPTER TWENTY-EIGHT

"When I came into this business," he said, still holding her hand, "I had a heart. I threw it out the window. For twenty years I've had a main spring inside me that kept ticking right on the dot. I'm going to tell you something. You are the only human being—the only woman—that has done anything to me. Internally, I mean. Why do you think your path was made so smooth in the studio?"

Leni released her hand. "Please," she whispered. "Isn't everything difficult enough as it is?"

"It is only fair that you know," Gerstenfield continued relentlessly. "When a man feels as deeply about a woman as I do about you—that man has rights that cannot be denied. When I talk like this to you, I'm breaking down everything that I've built up around myself. I'm like a soldier throwing away his weapons."

He paused and Leni attempted to speak but found her throat tight. She stood gazing at him for nearly a minute. Above her misty eyes the finely pencilled arch of her eyebrows drew together. She was scarcely breathing and her lips trembled a little. At the second effort she found words.

"Are you trying to tell me . . . that you love me . . . ?"

She looked at him in amazement and saw a man that was almost ugly.

For the first time she took stock of him in the matter of appearance. He looked thin, almost ill. Under his exceptional eyes the skin was white and bluish. There were lines in his face as though etched by acid. Yet he was not old. Forty at the outside, perhaps thirty-five.

"I don't know anything about love," he said, harshly abrupt. "I'm engorged tired. I've been tired for twenty years. There's something about you that rests me. I don't even feel desperate about you. Last night when I saw you up there on that screen it was the biggest kick I ever had in my life. Figure it out for yourself."

Slowly Leni began to forget herself—began to forget Lucky Cavanaugh—as unconscious pity for the man showed in her face.

There was something shameful and embarrassing in his plight. She had known many men and seen them suffer but she had never seen a strong man reveal his weakness before. It was a sorrowful thing to see his self-power melt that way. No woman ever before, Leni was certain, had wrenched such a confession from him. His own sufficiency, his overcoming of all soft sentiment, had been his proud flag flying at the masthead.

The thing for her to do, of course, was to push him away rudely.

That was what a true-hearted woman would be supposed to do.

But even in Hollywood, women are still a prey to a weakness dating back to the beginning of the race. It began to stir in Leni's breast, gently and kindly and infinitely tender . . . the mysterious, overwhelming quality known as the maternal instinct.

Gerstenfield stood motionless before her, emptied of all that he could say in words. From force of habit, he snapped up his wrist and looked at the watch upon it. He was due back on the lot.

This was the Hollywood of Herman Gerstenfield. Love ground under the heel of career.

The man had actually bared his soul and was in haste to get back to the studio.

Leni looked at him with misted eyes. He was harried, driven, consumed by the relentless dominance of the studio. Twelve, sixteen, eighteen hours his working day.

No wonder he was cold and harsh and arid!

Every normal thing of life, she thought, has passed him by. He knew nothing of living—of love, laughter, companionship.

Among all the great and good gifts of God to the world, Gerstenfield stood empty-handed and alone. . . .

"You poor man!" she said softly. He was looking around for his hat. When he spoke his words were dry, crisp and nervous.

"Well, that's settled! We'll talk it over again sometime. Glad you've come to your senses. Get that fellow off your mind, and be at the studio by three o'clock sharp!"

The amazing transformation left Leni stunned. The maternal instinct began to wither even as it started to bloom. Gerstenfield again was his old self, giving orders and dictating lives. When in this mood his words had the rattle of hail.

Leni had the feeling that she was caught in the vortex of a whirlwind.

"But I'm not going out to the studio," she said, her head spinning. "Why should I?"

"We start shooting the new picture next Monday," Gerstenfield shot at her. "Publicity department is making new stills of you this afternoon. We're going to have a reading of the story at five o'clock, and you'll have to be at the wardrobe department for fittings before that. The story ain't right yet and we're going to battle it out if it takes all night."

"But I thought the story was perfect," Leni said. "Wingate told me—"

"We threw the whole thing in the ash can this morning. I got four brand new writers in at eleven o'clock this morning and by noon they had already run into trouble. That's what we're battling about. You're a French girl on this American gunboat running up the Yangtze river in China. It's a blasted mess now but we'll get it straightened out."

She heard the last of this as he was disappearing toward the curb where his chauffeur waited with the big black car.

In any other walk of life the man would have been mildly insane but in this maniacal business he was rated a genius. No one thought him even eccentric, and he was reverentially imitated by a hundred lesser men. Most of these wore their hair rumpled, cultivated a burning stare and radiated weariness as though from over-work. None, however, succeeded in duplicating his brain power.

When he had gone, Leni pressed her hands to her temples, hoping her head would clear.

She stayed in the pictures she would become herself, in time, as zig-zag as Gerstenfield. Life would be angular and jerky, shot through with all manner of eccentricities like those modern paintings in the smart art shops.

The far-off public, knowing nothing of the real, Hollywood, could not possibly imagine the incredible confusion out of which the talking pictures emerged so splendidly. The life of the studio goes on with irresistible gusto and frantic activity. Except for the janitors, everyone was a creature of temperament.

It is a swarming hive in which none of the bees think in a straight line—and whose ever gets within the hive falls into the bewildering rhythm as if bewitched. Eventually, and this truly is a miracle, the jig-saw puzzle takes form and becomes a thing of living beauty. None of the bees can escape and none of them wants to escape.

It was the swarm-instinct that now made Leni remember the profoundly satisfying hum of activity, the beating of wings in which she had her part.

Gerstenfield had reminded her that she was a part of all this. Lucky Cavanaugh—love—had drawn her outside her orbit, but the counter-pull was terrific. It was stronger than she realized. But it was not stronger than love. . . .

Leni pulled her mind off Gerstenfield and the studio.

Her knees felt rubbery, but this was forgotten as she picked up the newspaper and, forcing herself to calmness, finished reading the story about Cavanaugh's arrest.

The details were scant and unsatisfactory.

A woman, Annette Santos, had been shot to death in his apartment. The police said she was a former sweetheart of Cavanaugh.

The shooting occurred about half past three o'clock in the morning. The woman had entered the building an hour earlier saying she had a date with Cavanaugh. The arrested man's Filipino servant confirmed the night clerk's story.

Several witnesses had been found who said they heard Cavanaugh and the woman quarreling shortly before the shot. What, if anything, Cavanaugh had told the police was not revealed in the newspaper.

"So he went directly from me last night to another woman," thought Leni. "I cannot believe he did it deliberately. It is strange but I do not feel the slightest pang of jealousy. It is ridiculous to expect that Lucky Cavanaugh would shoot a woman. The police are idiots to arrest him."

She went into another room and got police headquarters on the telephone. Her voice was cool and practical.

"Let me speak to Detective Mulrooney, please."

"Mulrooney's not here now," said the man at headquarters. "Who's calling?"

"Never mind," said Leni. "I'll call again." She hung up the receiver.

Someone was ringing the bell at the front door. The maid did not appear immediately and Leni herself walked to the front of the house.

Standing on the porch, holding his hat in one hand and mopping his forehead with a handkerchief, was Mulrooney himself.

NAMES you should know

YOU like to know names that everybody knows—name of the man who tied lightning to a kite; name of the man who watched a teakettle and went out and made an engine. Just knowing such names gives you pleasure.

Yet there are names that thousands of people know that can give you much more pleasure in a much more personal way. Names that stand for the best things to eat, to wear, to sleep on. Names, that if connected with the salad dressing, hat, fountain pen you select—or any other desirable thing—mean it is most desirable. Names written large in ADVERSIDISEMENTS.

Advertisements tell why those are wise names for you to know. Why such names greet you in the best grocery, department and hardware stores. Why those names are in the buying vocabulary of thousands . . . are believed in by thousands . . . justify belief!

Read the advertisements. Don't ask vaguely in a store for "cold cream," "a skillet," "a vacuum cleaner." Ask for So-and-So's Cold Cream, So-and-So's Skillet, So-and-So's Vacuum Cleaner. Use the names, you have learned through advertisements, that stand for the product that means most to you and most to everybody.

It pays to read all advertisements in this paper

TIMELY SUGGESTIONS ARE NOW MADE FOR PICNICS AND OUTINGS

Picnics are fun for grown-ups and children alike. They are an easy and inexpensive summer amusement—healthful, too, if the food that makes the picnic menu is properly chosen.

Perhaps your husband is one of those Boy Scouts who never grew up and so is able to build a fire out of doors? So much the better. Take one of the removable shelves from your gas stove and prop it up on stones in a sheltered place when you have reached your picnic spot. Have a fire built and when it is a bed of glowing coals your work begins! Small steaks or lamb chops may be broiled to a turn. A casserole of potatoes sliced and cooked in milk at home may be placed at one side of your improvised stove to reheat. Coffee—the most delectable in the world may be made over the fire—and first thing you know you have a feast fit for a king. Supplement the items above with fresh rolls, buttered at home, olives and sweet pickles and serve fresh fruit for dessert.

Maybe you prefer a cold luncheon with coffee kept hot in the thermos. Very well—here are some suggestions for you:

Rye bread sandwiches with minced ham spread
White bread sandwiches with cream cheese and jam filling
Potato salad or cole slaw
Stuffed eggs (the yolk blended with mustard, anchovy paste and salt and pepper with a little cheese)
Dill pickle slices
Ice box cookies

Hot baked beans (kept hot in casserole wrapped in paper)
Buttered Boston brown bread
Sweet pickles
Sliced cold ham
Frosted cup cakes
Iced coffee

Cold sliced meat loaf and sliced ham
Buttered buns
Pickled onions

It's Spreading

It seems that the fad for a southern exposure in midday's apparel is spreading from bathing beaches further inland. The picture above was made at a race track outside London recently. The fair bang-tail fan displays the newest creation in décolleté sports clothes.

BE SURE FRUIT TO BE CANNED FOR AUTUMN IS OF A GOOD GRADE

Fresh fruit in abundance suggests the time when it will not be so plentiful or so cheap, and the busy housewife gets out her pots and pans and rows of sparkling glass jars and sets to work so that autumn and winter will find pantry shelves well stocked.

In choosing fruit for canning be sure that it is of good grade and not too ripe. All jars and glasses and utensils used should be well sterilized. The first rule in successful canning is to heat the fruit to the point where all germs are destroyed and sealing it—air-tight—while it is scalding hot.

General rules as to the combination canning: use one-third to one-half as much sugar as fruit. For preserving: three-fourths as much sugar as fruit. For jelly: an equal amount of sugar and juice. For jam: equal amounts of sugar and fruit.

Greater success is assured if small amounts of preserves or jellies are put up at a time. The quality is better, the color deeper and richer. When making jelly see that the fruit is a little under ripe. Fruit that is a bit over-ripe may be utilized in making jam.

Jelly Making
Fruit should be thoroughly washed and cut or mashed. In making apple jelly add a little water to start the boiling and cook until tender over a low fire. Put the fruit through a jelly bag—allowing it to drain for several hours. The bag should not be squeezed as this makes the jelly cloudy. Add sugar and boil in small quantities until the jelly tests to desirable thickness in a saucer.

The less tart fruits require $\frac{3}{4}$ cup of sugar to cup of juice instead of an equal amount as in apple, currants and raspberries.

A variation in flavor may be obtained by combining the juices of different fruits—apple and quince, currant and raspberry, for example.

Do not neglect to put up a supply of pickles and relishes to give piquancy and tart flavor to your menus. A very good tomato pickle recipe follows:
1 qt. green tomatoes, 1 medium bunch celery, 2 sweet red peppers, 2 green peppers, 2 large mild onions, 1 small head cabbage, 2 cups vinegar, 1 pound brown sugar, 1 teaspoon ground mustard, 1 teaspoon turmeric. Chop or grind vegetables with $\frac{1}{4}$ cup salt and let stand overnight. Drain and press in cloth to remove all liquor possible. Add remaining ingredients and simmer till clear. Seal in sterilized jars.

PEANUT BUTTER is made by grinding well-roasted and carefully blanched peanuts, and ordinarily contains no other ingredient except that most manufacturers add salt as a regular feature of the grinding process. The quality of the butter depends upon the nuts used and the care and skill exercised in the various manufacturing operations.

A mixture of Virginia and Spanish peanuts is usually employed, so as to

The trail of a "goober" (as peanuts are sometimes called) through the plant where Ann Page peanut butter is made is a long winding path, where elevators, air currents, separating screens, polishers, blanchers, roasters, and the what-nots of cleaning, assorting and blending figure importantly in the conversion of the raw peanut into soft, savory, golden butter.

Thousands of pounds of nuts are stored in the huge, silo-like elevator, available for immediate manufacture into butter. Close by are storage rooms, where carloads of peanuts are stacked in sacks. But these peanuts at the average plant are more mole hills compared with the mountainous mass in huge warehouses holding the crop for the peanut butter mills.

First the peanuts have to be roasted, then cooled, then blanched. Machinery does all of these jobs. After blanching they go through the cleaning machine where gusts of air blow out the chaff or other impurities. Any improperly roasted nuts are picked out by hand when the cleaning machine discharges the nuts upon the picking table. The roasted peanuts, after dropping from the picking table belt, are carried right to the grinder. Here it is likely that several varieties of peanuts will be mixed together before grinding, in order to obtain the blended flavor desired.

The butter is discharged from the grinder right into jars seen in the grocery stores.

SHAMROCKS C. C. NOSE OUT JEFFERSON A. C., 5-4

Vic Potts' Shamrocks C. C. nosed out the Jefferson A. C., 5-4, last night on St. Ann's field. Four runs in the 4th inning enabled the Shamies to chalk up the victory.

Up until the fatal fourth, Moose Fry had the Greens eating out of his hands and took good care of the leading hitters. In the fourth, the Fourth Ward team made five hits and four of these were doubles. Before the inning was over, Narcisi had replaced Fry on the mound.

"Billy" Dugan toed the slab for the winners and gave the Mules nine hits. Britton solved Dugan easily banking out three doubles. Tulio made two hits and walked twice while Narcisi had two out of three.

which will be used for worship and social purposes.

The front of the structure is to be approached by two terraces from Washington avenue, and then steps will lead to the main lobby. The terrace stairways and lobby will be of flagstone. There are to be built two entrances on Chancellor street, one near the front of the building for access to the main floor or basement social room; and another near the rear for entrance to the Sunday School room and the pastor's study.

The social room in the basement is 37 feet wide and 55 feet long. On the floor in addition is a small class room, a kitchen and a boiler room. There will be an outside exit from the basement on the east side of the building.

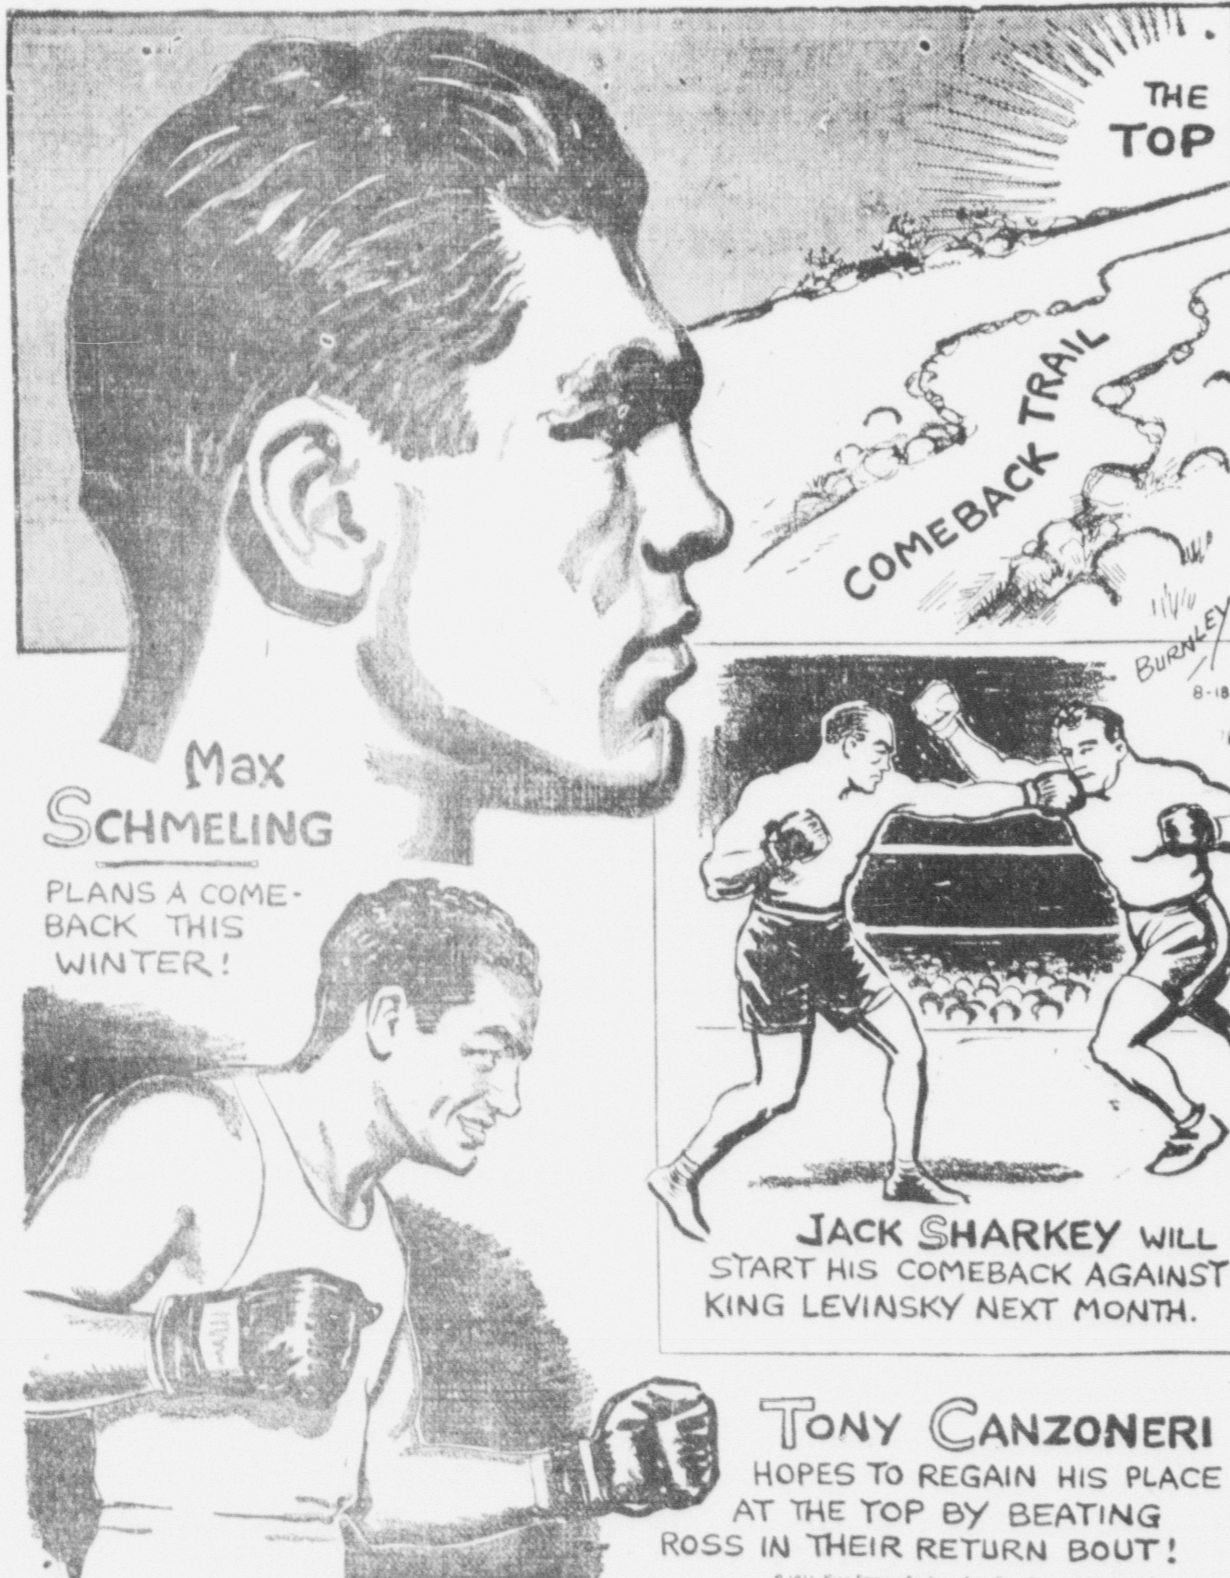

Entering the main floor of the building one will pass into a lobby nine feet wide and thirty-seven feet long. The nave of the church has an arch ceiling, asphalt tile floor and will contain 28 pews. The nave is 37 by 45 feet.

The chancel will be floored with rubber tile, be wainscoted and furnished with handsome altar, lectern and other furnishings. The pipe organ with space for choir will be at either side of the chancel. The pastor's study opens off to the right of the chancel.

At the rear of the auditorium is a balcony which affords additional seating capacity.

Ex-champs Try Comeback

By BURNLEY

Max SCHMELING

PLANS A COMEBACK THIS WINTER!

JACK SHARKEY WILL START HIS COMEBACK AGAINST KING LEVINSKY NEXT MONTH.

TONY CANZONERI HOPES TO REGAIN HIS PLACE AT THE TOP BY BEATING ROSS IN THEIR RETURN BOUT!

THERE is a great chance that the coming Fall and Winter may turn out to be the great comeback season of recent years. Three gentlemen of the purple who dropped their flinty crowns have plans under way for the days to come.

Sharkey, Schmeling and Canzoneri are the three deposed monarchs who want to win back to the top and who will stake their all on the comeback trail.

As to the heavyweight big shots, Sharkey and Schmeling: things are shaping up nicely for a Sharkey-Schmeling bout in December. These boys might just as well go at it again. Despite the easing off in popularity that Sharkey has suffered, it is not beyond possibility that the glob can capture attention in a quick climb to the championship heights.

But Canzoneri was in no way put to shame. He fought hard and fast all the way through—not hard or fast enough for the judges, however.

Next month, it appears, Tony will have a chance for a quick return to the lightweight throne. No one can say that Ross stalled to keep his title. He is meeting Canzoneri in New York and it figures to be a whale of a fight.

As to the heavyweights, big shots, Sharkey and Schmeling: things are shaping up nicely for a Sharkey-Schmeling bout in December. These boys might just as well go at it again. Despite the easing off in popularity that Sharkey has suffered, it is not beyond possibility that the glob can capture attention in a quick climb to the championship heights.

Previous to the Schmeling encounter, Sharkey will meet King Levinsky in Chicago—just why it is hard to say, but it might just as well be King Levinsky who will start the drums beating for the Sharkey comeback parade.

To the victor of the Sharkey-Schmeling fight will go a match with Max Baer in California under the sponsorship of Jack Dempsey—the promoter, you know. And that will be the main event on the comeback circuit.

Lack of activity can be blamed in good measure for the poor showing of Sharkey against Canzoneri and of Schmeling against Baer. They were huge disappointments.

But if either Schmeling or Sharkey can actually make a startling showing, the road is wide open for a quick climb to the championship heights.

In the rear of the main church building are the Sunday School rooms which may be entered from either side. Here are red oak floors. This part of the building has been planned so that further additions may be easily built which might include more Sunday School rooms, parsonage and garage.

The exterior of the building will be built of Holmesburg granite of reds, yellows and browns mingled with a few green shades that will harmonize in a warm tone. The roof will be of unfading green, random width, Mohawk Vermont slate with a thirty-six foot spire at the Washington avenue end.
